4th Annual Symposium in

WOMEN'S HEALTH ISSUES FOR THE PRIMARY CARE PROVIDER

Course Description

Designed for primary care physicians, nurse practitioners, physician assistants and other health care providers who manage the primary health care needs of women in their practices, this one-day symposium will provide up-to-date information on a variety of diagnosis and treatment issues as they relate to women's health care. Indiana University School of Medicine faculty will examine topics such as heart disease, domestic violence, obesity, osteoporosis and other health care issues of importance to women patients.

Course Objectives

At the conclusion of this program, participants should be able to:

- discuss the implications of recent research findings in heart disease as it relates to women;
- identify victims of domestic violence among patients and take appropriate action;
- identify current methods of contraception available to women;
- diagnose and manage: HPV virus in women, abnormal uterine bleeding, perinatal depression; and
- review the clinical diagnosis and management of osteoporosis and obesity in women.
